

Convocation set for Sept. 15

A convocation will be held Sept. 15 in honor of the International Year of Disabled Persons. David T. Kearns, president of Xerox Corporation and chairman of the U.S. Council of the International Year of Disabled Persons will give the Convocation address at 3 p.m. in the Gallaudet College Auditorium.

While all faculty and staff have received invitations, it is not possible to declare this a holiday, nor is it possible for all employees to attend. Vital services need to be provided during this time and offices must remain open. Faculty and staff members may attend with permission of their supervisors on the condition that work is not seriously disrupted.

Gallaudet is proud to be able to sponsor this convocation to honor the International Year of Disabled Persons and it is hoped that many employees will have the opportunity to attend.

Edmund Muskie

Muskie lecture scheduled

The Honorable Edmund Muskie, former Secretary of State and senator, will kick off Gallaudet's new Lincoln Lectureship Series on Liberty and Equality when he comes to campus Monday, Sept. 21.

Senator Muskie will speak in the Gallaudet Auditorium on the subject of international relations at 7:30 p.m. His hour-long lecture will be followed by a half hour question and answer session. This is Muskie's first lecture in Washington since he left office.

The lecture will be by invitation only. Approximately 750 people will be invited, and about a third of the audience will be Gallaudet faculty, staff and students. However, after invitations have been sent out and r.s.v.p.s received, any tickets left over will be made available to the campus community on a first-come, first-served basis. The availability of the free tickets will be publicized, and tickets can be picked up at the Box Office in Ely Center on Sept. 17 and 18 from 3-6 p.m. both days.

The lecture will also be televised live via the Gallaudet College Television closed-circuit cable system for those students, faculty and staff who wish to see the lecture but are not in the theatre audience. The lecture will be videotaped for persons to view later or for classroom use.

The lecture series is sponsored by Lincoln National Life Insurance Company, which presented Gallaudet a check for $32,000 to make the lectures possible. The check was given to President Edward C. Merrill, Jr. last February at Ford's Theatre by Ian Rolland, president and chief executive officer of Lincoln Life. Rolland noted that Lincoln Life was committed to perpetuating the ideals and heritage of our 16th president, Abraham Lincoln, who signed the act of Congress establishing Gallaudet as a college on April 8, 1864.

A wide spectrum of persons from off campus are being invited to the lecture, including representatives and guests of Lincoln Life, selected congressional representatives and staff members, selected staff of federal agencies, members of the Washington area higher education community, members of the electronic and print media, and members of the Washington business community as well as some members of the campus community.

Merrill will be the emcee, and Rolland will be a host at the event. Muskie will be formally introduced by a faculty member.

The lecture series will also bring several other prominent scholars, thinkers and scientists to Gallaudet during the 1981-82 academic year. The second scheduled speaker will be Isaac Asimov, scientist, editor, futurist, science fiction writer and author of more than 200 books. Asimov's lecture will take place on Tuesday, Nov. 10. The third scheduled speaker will be Dr. Arthur Laffer, economist at the University of Southern California and the man whose ideas are behind Reagan's economic policies and theories. Laffer will lecture here on Monday, Jan. 11, 1982. A fourth speaker will be scheduled probably in mid-March.

Parking zones change on campus

If you haven't already registered your car and received your new parking sticker for this academic year, registration is still taking place at the Department of Safety and Security in Chapel Hall from 7:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m.

Several significant changes have been made this year in the parking plan, including the creation of an additional parking zone. The primary importance of the various changes is that statistically, no one zone will have a better chance of getting a parking place than another, according to Howard moved and zone letters will be painted on individual parking spaces.

Also, on-street parking is being eliminated in a number of areas. Under the new parking plan, which will take effect once everyone has new parking stickers, only visitors to campus can park by the curbs, and only on Lincoln Circle, which runs through campus from the entrance gates past Hall Memorial Building, and on Telegraph Road outside MSSD.

"We are trying to phase out curb parking," said Cihak. The Parking Committee is still uncertain about how much space to set aside for visitors, he said. But now visitors will have to get passes from the Department of Safety and Security, and next semester the Parking Committee will have data on the number of visitors to Gallaudet.

People getting their parking stickers this week will be asked to fill out a questionnaire. The questionnaire will be sent to people who have already registered. The Parking Committee will look at the data collected and be able to adjust the number of spaces in the zones on the basis of the number of people who use each zone. Any necessary adjustments will be made within the next month.

There are now 1,308 zoned spaces available in the five parking zones and another additional 400 spaces in the overflow lot across 6th Street and in reserved areas. All parking zones will be on the campus side of 6th Street, and the lot across 6th street will only be used for overflow.

See map of the new parking zones inside this issue.

Cihak, head of the Parking Committee which formulated the new plan.

People who work in the Central Utilities Building will now have their own parking zone. In the past, they shared the C zone and since they usually came to work earlier than other C zone holders, they got most of the parking spaces. Now, the creation of the new zone will mean that other C zone holders will have an increased opportunity to park in their zone. The new CUB zone will be in the Hanson Plaza garage.

Student parking has been moved out of the Hanson Plaza garage to the old Plaza Chevrolet parking area on 6th Street, on the premise that people who need to use their cars to get to work should have priority.

In addition, zone signs will be re-

It's time to replace old parking stickers with new ones.

Library Bits & Pieces

Individualized Learning Services

by Tom Harrington

The Gallaudet College Library's Individualized Learning Services area has a wide variety of media-related services, some well-known, some little-known. One of these services is simultaneously well-known and little-known. This apparent paradox concerns audiovisual equipment: while many people know that ILS loans out 16mm film projectors, slide projectors, overhead projectors and other "best sellers," a number of devices go begging for use because few are aware the Library has them.

For example, a projection pointer will throw an arrow of light onto a screen, a dandy thing to have when one wants to point out details on a projected transparency, especially in medium-to-large-sized rooms and auditoriums.

Another generally unknown gem is the portable microfiche reader. If you have a microfiche, you need not be in the Library to read it. This reader can be borrowed for reading in the convenience of your office or home. A copy of the Library's COM Catalog can be borrowed from ILS, and the portable reader will allow you to peruse the Library catalog outside the Library.

These portable microfiche readers have a feature useful for classes or for the visually impaired: the reader's own screen can be removed for direct projection onto a projection screen or a blank wall for an extra-large image. Though not as flexible as the microfiche readers, portable microfilm readers are also available for those wishing to read microfilm on reels.

Photography enthusiasts may like to know of the tripods that can contribute to the effectiveness of their photos by providing a rock-steady support for their cameras. Photographic slides can be previewed easily in one of the Library's slide viewers that eliminate the bother of setting up a regular slide projector. A "pocket" slide projector can be used by those who take midget slides with size 110 pocket-camera film.

These are some of the little-known audiovisual aids in Individualized Learning Services. Others can be discovered by a visit to the ILS on the lower level of the Learning Center.

Education Dept. provides certification program for West Virginia teachers

The Department of Education is providing a certification program for teachers of the hearing impaired in the state of West Virginia.

The program is part of the technical assistance and outreach projects under the direction of Boris Bogatz, assistant dean of the School of Education and Human Services.

The program was undertaken with two purposes: to prepare teachers and clinicians who are qualified for certification in general education but not in education of the hearing impaired; and to provide direction and assistance to West Virginia University in the establishment of a teacher preparation program.

This summer marked the beginning of the program made possible through contractual agreements between Gallaudet College and the West Virginia State Department of Education. Connie Bettino and Michael Valentine, formerly of the Gallaudet faculty, are the state representatives responsible for management of the contracts, initial selection of program participants and local arrangements. Virginia Heidinger is acting as the Department of Education liaison person working with Bogatz.

West Virginia University in Morgantown provided the site for the 1981 summer courses. The program participants, who are teachers or clinicians who will be working with hearing impaired children in the fall, spent nine weeks in residence and completed 10 semester hours of coursework from the Gallaudet teacher preparation program. Instructors for the summer courses were Joyce Groode, Karen Stoyko, Virginia Heidinger and Robin Jones.

The Department of Education will be offering one course during the 1981 fall semester and another in the spring of 1982. Further plans call for a second summer of full-time study with a final course and practicum in the fall of 1982.

Those participants who successfully complete the 34 hours in the program will be recommended for provisional level Council on Education of the Deaf (CED) certification. The program differs from the regular Gallaudet graduate teacher education program in which students earn a Master of Arts degree and the course requirements for professional level CED certification.

Reports from Bogatz and the instructors indicate that all students had a successful summer and will be undertaking their fall teaching responsibilities better qualified for working with hearing impaired children.

Faculty and student research

Shirley Stein, associate professor of Communication Arts, has completed a survey of undergraduate special and exchange students. She investigated student attitudes, objectives, career choice influences and long-term effects of deaf-hearing contacts.

Subjects for the study were selected from three categories of people: undergraduate hearing students who spent one or two semesters at Gallaudet as special or exchange students; undergraduate hearing impaired Gallaudet students who spent one semester as exchange students at either Oberlin or Western Maryland College; and undergraduate hearing students at Oberlin College who enrolled in a course on Orientation to Deafness and Introduction to Manual Communication.

Using questionnaires devised for each of the three populations, Stein received responses from 139 subjects, representing more than 80% of the individuals contacted in each group. She reports that the study's results attest to the benefits derived from each of the three programs and to the need and desirability for their continuation.

College Council meets

College Council members discussed and endorsed two policies, on Staff Retirement and Archives, at their Aug. 26 meeting.

The policy on staff retirement puts down in writing the procedure that the College has been following regarding retirement of staff members. Retirement age for staff employees at Gallaudet is 70, and employees may be permitted to work beyond age 70 with approval of their immediate supervisor, budget unit head and appropriate administrative officer. All extensions of employment beyond age 70 are made for one-year periods.

President Merrill told the group that the new Archives policy will allow the valuable items and documents of the College to be preserved, and archivist David De Lorenzo attended the meeting to answer any questions. The Gallaudet College Archives collects, preserves and administers the official records of the College—all non-current recorded information of any division, department or office. The policy states that no record will be destroyed until the division, department or office and the Archives have agreed that they are dispensable. De Lorenzo said they would begin implementing the policy by contacting the vice presidents about any records of value in their divisions. Confidential records, such as legal files or medical and student records, will not be included in the Archives.

Merrill spoke to the group about institutional advancement, saying that the concept of institutional advancement is that everyone has something to offer to help improve the College. The College Council will be discussing institutional advancement in the future. Merrill also appointed Rudy Hines to be a faculty observer at the Board of Trustees meetings.

The College Council is an advisory group to the president that meets monthly.

Federal funding for the handicapped

Nearly all of the Department of Education's 150 programs will feel the pinch of congressional budget revisions, either in the form of funding caps or legislative changes. The fiscal 1982 federal budget reconciliation bill signed into law by President Reagan consolidates 28 elementary and secondary education programs into a block grant and makes fundamental changes in such programs as Title I. Programs for the education of handicapped children escaped severe changes in the budget process.

State grants for handicapped education will have a $969 million ceiling for fiscal 1982 and $1 billion annual ceiling for fiscal 1983 and 84. Special studies under handicapped education law received a $2.3 million cap, while Preschool Incentive Grants have been limited to $25 million.

Projects to aid severely handicapped children were limited to $5 million, regional resource centers to $9.8 million, deaf-blind centers to $16 million, early childhood projects to $20 million, regional vocational and adult projects to $4 million, personnel development to $58 million, recruitment and information to $1 million, innovation and development to $20 million and media services to $19 million.

TV reporter speaks on women's roles

Jackie Brockington, reporter and weather forecaster with News Center 4, was the speaker at the Women's Equality Day Program held in the Kendall Auditorium Aug. 27. The program was held, in part, to commemorate Aug. 26, 1920, the date on which the women's suffrage struggle ended with women in America guaranteed the right to vote.

Brockington told the group that her role as a woman reporter was becoming more traditional. "Many jobs held by women today were once considered to be men's work," she said. "Now men are finally learning that women can match them in many areas."

She said she was glad to see more women and more black women in the media and noted that women moving the scenes in television are also moving up, although slowly. Channel 4 now has female engineers and camerawomen, as well as a female station manager.

Still, said Brockington, television station assignment desks tend to give women reporters the "fluff stuff" to cover. "I like them to know I can do the same job that my male counterparts do," she said.

The television media is a very cosmetic business, said Brockington: "They don't want older women; looks are very important. This is where discrimination sets in . . . We can grow older as long as it's not on TV."

Women tend to shape themselves based on other people's attitudes and expectations, Brockington believes. "Working in the TV business has taught me not to copy anyone but to be myself," she said.

Brockington told her audience that there are three legal ways of acquiring money: inherit it, marry it or earn it. "Most of us fall into the latter category," she said. "The number of women in the work force has made people sit up and take notice," she pointed out, since women now have a lot of buying power.

Asked about the Equal Rights Amendment, Brockington said, "I'm for the women's movement but I've been in it ever since I've been born. I don't know how to do it any other way."

This was Brockington's second visit to Kendall School. After the new facility opened, she came here to do a story on it.

The Women's Equality Day Program was sponsored by the Office of the President and the Commission on Affirmative Action. Last year's speaker for the event was Sheila Tobias, a founding member of the National Organization of Women in New Hampshire and author of Overcoming Math Anxiety.

President's Office Notes

Equal Opportunity

LaVarne Hines, Equal Opportunity Officer, came to Gallaudet in August of 1979. Her duties here are a combination of on-campus and community activities. Her role within the College focuses on the affirmative action hiring practice here. Hines oversees the hiring process at the College, MSSD and KDES from the beginning, when she instructs screening committees and interviewers about the legalities of questions put to candidates, through her final signature of approval just before the job is offered. Her signature at this point certifies that Gallaudet's Affirmative Action Plan and law has been observed. She also works in conjunction with the College Faculty Welfare Committee.

Hines advises employees of the appropriate grievance procedures when there have been job-related problems and, where possible, attempts to resolve concerns that an employee may have.

Aside from this basic hiring activity, she is responsible for updating the College Affirmative Action Plan in accordance with current legislation. She receives information from agencies and Congress daily to keep her abreast of legal interpretations of employment laws. She is the administration's representative on the College's Commission on Affirmative Action, on the Barrier Removal Project Committee and the Deafness Related Concerns Council Task Force on Employment.

Additionally, Hines advises the president on all matters relating to Equal Employment Opportunity and community relations. She has planned the program for Women's Equality Day for the last two years and most recently brought Jackie Brockington to the campus.

Much of Hines' time is occupied with the community around Gallaudet and with the District of Columbia at large. She is an ex-officio member of the Gallaudet Community Relations Council and assists that group in program planning. She has represented the College in the community when there have been problems connected with construction here, testified before the Board of Zoning Adjustments regarding community approval of the College plan when property was acquired and at any other time when a positive link with the community was required.

Hines is a very busy, effective ambassador for Gallaudet. Her office is in Hall Memorial Building Room 117, the Office of Institutional Advancement, and her telephone is x5075. She has an "open door" policy, so feel free to stop by or give her a call.

Judith Reynolds is an assistant professor with the Home Economics Department. She will be teaching Marriage and the Family, Early Child Development and Home Management. She has worked at Gallaudet both full time and part time since 1970 and has also done welfare and cooperative extension work. She received her BS from State University of New York, Buffalo, and MS from Cornell.

Nancy Walker is an instructor with the Home Economics Department. She has her BS and M.Ed in Home Economics and worked three years as a home economics teacher in a Fort Worth, TX high school.

The upper level of Gallaudet's newest parking area, behind the Field House, is open for use, but the lower level will not be completed until October.

Parking

The number of cars registered on campus last year was about 1,300, according to the Department of Safety and Security. It is difficult to predict exactly how many people will register cars this year, said Cihak, since some faculty and staff members are making use of public transportation.

Parking that has been eliminated on campus, in addition to curb parking, includes a 24-space dirt lot behind Dorm 5, which will be converted back to turf, and a couple of indented spaces on Olmsted Green. But the campus has picked up more new spaces than these which have been lost, Cihak said.

The 1,308 zoned spaces include the new parking area behind the Field House, next to the Gallaudet Auditorium. The upper level of this parking area is already completed and ready for use, but the lower level will not be completed until October. This will cause some parking pinch for people who are zoned to park in that area, until the rest of the Field House lot is completed.

Among Ourselves

John Schroedel is currently conducting employment studies on graduates of the National Technical Institute for the Deaf in Rochester, NY. As a research associate on faculty exchange with Institutional Planning and Research at NTID since mid-June, his appointment has been extended through November. A research specialist with Gallaudet's Research Institute, Schroedel is also an assistant professor in the Department of Educational Foundations and Research. It is anticipated that a NTID researcher will visit Gallaudet later this year to continue this research exchange program between Gallaudet and NTID.

Janice Richardson has assumed responsibility as acting director of the Instructional Development and Evaluation Center of College Educational Resources. The center provides instructional development support to the College and Pre-College academic programs. The former director, Nancy Fones, has accepted a position with the Model Secondary School for the Deaf.

Thomas Landers, dean of the School of Education and Human Services and professor of Administration presented a paper entitled "The Administration of the Educational System in the People's Republic of China" on Aug. 18 at the National Conference of Professors of Educational Administration held in Seattle.

Jane Reehl, assistant professor in Gallaudet's Biology Department, participated in the Summer Research Institute program at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. She worked in the BioMed lab studying mutagenesis in DNA repair. Reehl also addressed the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory Women's Association on the topic of "Succeeding in a Hearing World." She completed her doctoral work in molecular genetics at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh last year.

Captioned ABC News to present special programs

The Captioned ABC News, shown in the Washington area weekdays at 11:30 p.m. on Channel 22 and 26, has scheduled several special captioned programs during September.

On Sept. 7, "See What I Say" features an interview with feminist singer Holly Near, whose concert tours include a sign language interpreter. Deaf women tell how Near and her songs affect their lives and Near is shown in concert.

Also on Sept. 7, "Poetry of Robert Frost" feature actor Tim Scanlon of the National Theatre of the Deaf signing and performing two of Frost's poems, including "The Road Not Taken."

On Sept. 15-24 a series on "The Ethics of Interpreting" will investigate all types of interpreters, report on their training and certification and explain how they differ from advisers and advocates.

On Sept. 25 the Captioned ABC News will provide a roundup of events that will be taking place on this "International Day of the Deaf." Around the world deaf and hearing people will celebrate the day with presentations, tributes, dedications and speeches. The program will also look at what the future may hold for deaf Americans.

Each Monday night, Captioned Chronicle provides the latest news of legal and civil rights developments across the country.

The Captioned ABC News is produced each weeknight by The Caption Center at WGBH-TV, Boston, and broadcast on more than 180 public television stations.
